Sustainability (ERASME)* and by Plate-forme 21,
with the support of :

Co-funded by the Erasmus+ Programme
of the European Union

How to promote strong sustainability by relying on multiple skills ?

The objectives of this symposium

- Present the expertise of researchers in sustainability
- Propose a methodological framework for integrating systemic issues such as biodiversity, climate, energy transition, water management...
- Ask academic, institutional and socio-economic actors about their ability to carry out sustainability at a local scale.
- Initiate research actions with socioeconomic actors and local municipalities in the Massif Central area.
- Create a network of European and international researchers on strong sustainability.

Expected public

- Researchers, teachers and students.
- Academic, institutional and socio-economic actors.

The context

While the notion of sustainability continues to be associated with the Brundtland Report (1987) and the concept of sustainable development, a community of sustainability researchers and practitioners increasingly seeks to emancipate the concept to be consistent with the knowledge and aspirations of the moment.

The enthusiasm and expectations for more sustainability go beyond mere environmental issues. They touch on crucial social issues as well. Indeed, if reducing our ecological footprint is a necessity, the prerequisite of reduced consumption is associated with other social objectives. Some of those objectives claim a certain legitimacy, for instance the prominent Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Eradication of poverty and inequality, universal access to education, electricity and water should not be treated as mere political goals, but as urgent demands from the world's citizens. The recent Yellow Vests movement in France is just one example of what citizens demand today: less inequality and more participatory democracy to solve social problems.

Academics as well as practitioners should refuse compromises and possible cover-ups that originate from a weak sustainability paradigm, for example green growth and decoupling. The symposium papers intends to question the paradigms, models, scenarios and practices that embody sustainability. One may wonder what meaning should be given to the very idea of sustainability and the representations it conveys.
